OF THE

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

OF THE

TOWN OF MILLBURY,

FOR THE

YEAR ENDING MARCH 7, 1859,

WORCESTER:

PRINTED BY CHARLES HAMILTON,
PALLADIUM OFFICE.

REPORT.

IN presenting their annual Report to the Town, your Committee feel that it would be desirable to make mention of positive and specific improvements in our schools. In order to do so, the Committee must have each class distinctly in mind from term to term, and be able to mark the progress made, with as much accuracy as a parent marks the physical growth and mental improvement of his own child. As a matter of fact, however, very few parents can make any accurate statement of the actual improvement made by their children from one year to another. Though daily with their children, yet their progress is not perceptible from one day to another. But, in the lapse of time, they find their children have outgrown their former clothing, and that their minds take larger and more correct views of objects around them. Hence, parents conclude their children have advanced both in stature and wisdom. So the Committee, though they cannot state the positive amount of knowledge acquired in our schools from year to year, yet they are able to say, that progress is made; for they now look upon a class of children in the Primary school, learning the alphabet, and by and by they find that class in the Intermediate school, and then in the Grammar school, and finally in the High school. We cannot distinctly describe every step taken in reaching one point after another.

Although our schools are not as good as we desire, and although their condition plainly admits of great improvement, yet we feel that they will not suffer in comparison with schools in earlier times.

Some persons are very apt to think, when viewing schools at a distance, and in the abstract, that they are not as good as they used to be, and that real interest in them has departed. But we have only to bring ourselves into living contact with the young, and with those parents whose children are in school, to correct this misapprehension. For aught we can see, children study as well, and behave as well now, as they did in the days of our fathers. We are sure parents love their children now, as well as parents loved their children then. Parents are as solicitous to have their children well instructed. It is true, there are too many who regard schools with indifference, and undervalue their advantages; yet the number of those who prize good schools is not small, and whose want of interest in a school arises from its imperfection, or want of real worth. Hence, we may be encouraged to go on from year to year, in making efforts to promote the welfare of our schools.

It is sufficient to say of this school, that it has been under the instruction of Miss Emily J. Putnam through the year; and that, as her experience increases, her conscientiousness, her faithfulness and earnestness suffer no diminution. There has been a general, steady and uniform progress manifest in this school.

But the teacher's labors have been performed under some disadvantages. The number of pupils has been too large for one teacher. The past winter, there have been 34 pupils under ten years of age,—just enough to make a very pretty primary school. The remaining 35 would make a very good school, and afford labor enough for one teacher. The school-room also is not comfortable, especially for the younger scholars. The seats are not suitable for small children. The room contains between five and six thousand cubic feet, room barely sufficient to furnish continued respiration to 75 persons. If the present number of scholars shall continue, the district will doubtless make better provision for them.

This school was taught, in summer, by Miss Ellen D. Peirce, in winter, by Mr. Horace H. Bryant.

For some reason, the summer school was not satisfactory to all the parents; but Miss Peirce has elsewhere proved herself to be a talented, an efficient and successful teacher. The winter school, so far as we know, gave entire satisfaction. The pupils were very much interested in their studies, and the master acquitted himself with great credit.

Mrs. Harriet M. Warfield taught the higher department through the year. The frequent changes among the scholars, and their irregular attendance, render this school rather difficult to manage well. But we may say, that Mrs. Warfield did well. Though she did not urge her pupils on with as much will and determination as the teacher who preceded her did, yet she succeeded quite as well in securing the good will and cheerful obedience of her scholars.

The Primary department was taught, in summer, by Miss Sarah J. Livermore, and in winter, by Miss Martha A. Smith. The former exerted a good influence over her school by her gentle and quiet manners; the latter infused life and energy into her pupils by the influence of her own activity and zeal. This was Miss Smith's first school, and her beginning gives promise of becoming an effective teacher.

UNION DISTRICT. No. IV.

No. Scholars in Summer, - - 192. Length of School, - 32 weeks.
 " " Winter, - - 153. Money appropriated, $593 00.
 Average age in Grammar Department, 12 1-3 years; in Intermediate, 10 1-8 years; in Primary, 8 years.

The first half of the summer term of the Grammar Department was taught by Mr. T. R. Harrington; the latter half, by Miss Caroline A. Leland, who also taught the winter term. Your Committee are sorry to say, that they cannot speak very highly of this school. They have even had some doubts whether they ought to have allowed the school to go on without a change of teachers. The teacher has not been without her friends. She could not be removed, consequently, without creating parties and divisions in the District,—evils always to be deprecated and avoided if possible.

Miss Leland entered the school under unfavorable circumstances. Quite a large class of the older pupils had just appeared before the Committee for admittance into the High School, but were not permitted to enter. They manifested considerable disapprobation. The feeling of hostility towards the Committee, was unfriendly to mental application, and begot in them a spirit of insubordination and early prejudice against their teacher. For their unsubmissive and indocile state of mind, the teacher was not accountable. It was hoped the pupils would think better of themselves, and become more resigned to their condition, after a farther acquaintance with their teacher. We find these pupils have been more studious the past winter, than they were in the fall. Still, the school has not answered our desires; we have by no means been satisfied with it. But the Committee are not satisfied that they should have done better if they had broken the school up and subjected it to the uncertainties of a new trial. The school has been very much spoken against by members of the District, and has had but very little friendly encouragement. Under such circumstances, it would be difficult for any teacher to succeed well. Your Committee, therefore, while they do not claim that they have pursued the wisest course in relation to this school, would solicit a charitable judgment upon their decision, as they believe an opposite course would have been one of doubtful expediency.

Miss Mary E. Andrews taught the Intermediate Department during the summer. She is a thorough and intelligent teacher. The winter term has been under the charge of Miss Abby Sweetser. She has done very well for one who has had no previous experience in teaching.

Miss Fannie Warner taught the Primary Department, during the summer, with her usual success. The winter school has been under the charge of Miss Ellen D. Peirce, whose labors have been practical, energetic and successful.

Average age, 10 8-9 years.

This school is a very retired and quiet one, reminding us of the rural character of our schools in earlier times, before the inhabitants congregated in villages so much as they now do. The greatest fault we have to find with this school, is the want of a full and distinct utterance of voice in the pupils' recitations. Miss Ellen M. Pitts has taught the school during the year, and has faithfully and conscientiously discharged her duties.

EAST DISTRICT. NO. VI.

Average age in Grammar Department, 12 ²¹ / ₃₈ yrs. In Primary, 7 ¹ / ₂ yrs.

The older pupils in this school have shown more self-respect, have been more studious and respectful to others, than has heretofore been usual with them. Miss Mattie A. Potter has labored through the year, for the good of her pupils, with a steady earnestness and a very commendable success. There are a number of very promising scholars here, whom we hope soon to see in the High School.

Miss Mary F. Goodell has had charge of the younger children. She has manifested towards her pupils feelings of kindness and affection, which entitle her to the gratitude of the parents, as well as the affection of the children. The children were apparently happy, loved their school, and were sorry to have it closed.

HAYWARD DISTRICT. No. VII.

There have not been a sufficient number of scholars in this District, the past year, to justify opening of the school-house. But the education of the children has not been neglected. Three of the pupils attended the school on Park Hill last summer, and they have been well instructed at home the past winter. Money appropriated, $90.

HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. H. E. Rockwell, Principal. Miss A. L. Maynard, Assistant.

The former Principal, Mr. H. P. Roberts, left his charge at the close of the spring term. Your Committee, after considerable correspondence with twenty or more applicants, and after holding personal interviews with several individuals, decided on the election of Mr. Rockwell to the Principalship of our High School. The ability and success with which he has managed the school thus far, have confirmed them in the wisdom of their choice. The following has been the attendance during the year: Spring term, 48; Fall term, 52; Winter term, 58. It will be perceived the school has been unusually small. This is owing, principally, to the fact, that no new class has been admitted during the year. It is a fact, also, that the aggregate of scholars in attendance on our schools the past winter, has been 98 less than the aggregate attendance one year ago.

The following is a view of the classification and studies as taught by the separate teachers the present term.

Taught by Mr. Rockwell.		Taught by Miss Maynard.

In addition to the above branches, there have been daily exercises on different subjects for the whole school. Proper attention has been given to composition writing and declamations; and also to Phonography. Several pupils have made considerable progress in Phonetic reading and writing.

A glance at the above classification will show that the labors of the school have been discreetly divided; and the Committee can assure the town, that they have been faithfully performed. So far as your committee are aware, the school has never, since its establishment, been in a more prosperous and promising condition. For the past two terms, there have been more study and evident improvement among those in regular attendance, than we have ever before witnessed in this school.

No doubt the smallness of the school has been very favorable to such a result. The pupils have reason to congratulate themselves on having enjoyed an opportunity so propitious for thorough instruction and mental culture, and on having so wisely improved it. No one will deny that the teachers have been faithful and have well earned their money.

But the committee have been fearful the town might think they have expended too much money on a few individual pupils, and that they ought to have admitted some new classes from the district schools. The fact is, however, that the committee could not find among those who came before them for examination, a sufficient number to form a class, that, in their opinion, were qualified to enter the High School. A very careful discrimination might have admitted three or four candidates, if they had been sufficiently advanced to enter any of the existing classes; but it is not deemed wise to form a new class for only three or four. Those pupils who presented themselves for examination were principally from Union District, and it was well known to the committee, that there were many scholars in the other districts as well, and even better qualified for admittance, who did not present themselves, because they chose to become better qualified before applying. But there is a prospect of a large class being admitted at the opening of the spring term. We can assure the town, that the High School is now in a good condition to receive a new class, and that when admitted they will enjoy instruction eminently thorough and practical.

The Committee would say, that they held a special meeting to consider the propriety of removing Miss Maynard to the Grammar school in Union District for one term, to fit a class for the High School; but as they had no authority to do so, they laid this plan aside. After considering the question of leaving the High School under the care of one Teacher, and thereby losing the services of Miss Maynard, a loss the Town cannot afford, the Committee came to the unanimous opinion, that, considering the then low state of the school, and its actual classification, which required the services of two teachers, they should do injustice to the future welfare of this school if they should not prove faithful, and decided in improving its present condition. Hence they decided on the course since pursued.

Although we can say, that there has been more than a usual amount of study the past winter, by the older youth in our schools; especially by those aiming to be admitted to the High School; yet it is a fact much to be lamented, that there are many youth growing up in our midst, who have no proper appreciation of school privileges, or of the advantages of education. We close this Report, by stating some advantages consequent on good schools; by suggesting some reasons why these schools are not more highly prized; and by offering some considerations calculated to stir up the minds of community on this subject.

The young come into the world and grow up in dependence on others. They find provisions made for their wants. They often vainly imagine it will always be so. But as years come on, they find themselves impelled to rely on their own exertions and acquirements. These will then form the staple of their dependencies. They will then find education a necessity of life.

Without knowledge we can never act independently. We must always go and come at the direction, or bidding of others, or follow the impulses of a blind will. We must, at least, follow the direction of others till our own experience and observation shall furnish us a guide. But to wait till experience and observation teach us, will be to wait for what will avail us very little when attained. In such a school, wisdom comes only at the close of the day, or in old age. The experience and observation of mankind have been systematised and recorded for the benefit of the young. Time is given and teachers furnished to induce the young to seek and assist them in acquiring this knowledge. Hence, a necessity is laid upon them to search for these recorded treasures.

The young desire happiness. Knowledge will place it within their own power. Without this, they must be dependent on the caprices of others, or on their own blind will. The little blind girl said, "she had never known, till she began to learn, that it was a happiness to live." The mind that is filled with notions and superstitions, with the fooleries and absurdities prevalent among the young and the ignorant, has no idea of real, mental enjoyment. A mind that is properly instructed, finds a joy in everything it contemplates. Says Dr. Wayland, "all the happiness of man is derived from discovering, applying, or obeying the laws of his Creator; and all his misery is the result of ignorance or disobedience."

Mental activity is not only necessary to happiness, it is also essential to health. It is generally easy to distinguish a youth under proper mental training, from one who has neglected and despised instruction. The shining countenance, the clear, bright eye, and the expressive movements of the body, present a beautiful contrast to the dull and vacant glare, and the clownish motions of the ignorant. Clear and innocent thought, with the consciousness of knowing something certainly, will surely impart a healthful glow to the whole exterior person.

The acquirement of knowledge is in itself a pleasure, and carries with itself a speedy and abundant reward. Every new thought and every new fact, becomes a source of thrilling interest, and adds greatly to the sum of real happiness.

But advantages so great are neglected by multitudes. The reasons for this neglect are doubtless various. Study is not pleasant to one; it is not sufficiently exciting to another; its necessity is not seen and realized by a third; and very many do not possess the patience and industry needed in the acquisition of learning. They act as though knowledge would come by intuition, at the very moment when needed. But the youth is sadly deceived. Sound learning never comes to the indolent, never bestows its practical benefits upon those who despise and neglect it in youth. Its blessings rest in the bosom of the diligent, and its honors light on the brow of the studious.

It is an important question how this reluctance to study is to be overcome. A similar reluctance to manual labor is often manifest. This reluctance to labor is overcome by the example and instruction of the parent, or by compulsion, or by the force of necessity. When we consider, that the young are so fond of momentary pleasure, and those activities which refuse to bear restraint, and that the advantages of knowledge appear so remote, and unappreciable, we realize the difficulty of removing this reluctance.

In overcoming this reluctance very much depends on the choice and determination of the pupil. Nothing can be effectually done in opposition to a willful determination to be ignorant. Let some one point, not difficult of attainment, be fixed and sought. Its attainment will be attended with real pleasure, which will furnish a new and stronger motive for another and still more difficult acquisition. Having taken a few steps in advancement, and finding the field of vision opening, with increasing delights, we may hope the youth will not halt in the field, or turn back from the path of knowledge.

Let the youth picture in his imagination the consequences of idleness, as seen in the advanced age of one who, in early life, refused to "Apply his heart unto instruction, and his ears to the words of knowledge." Such an one has often been favored with rich opportunities for self-ennoblement, or personal advantage, which were as often lost for want of ability to seize and improve them. He has come to the harvest, but has nothing to reap, because he neglected to sow the seed in the spring-time of life. His mind is like a haunted house, an object of human desolation, but inhabited by ghosts and hobgoblins.

When, from the stand point of mature life, or advanced age, they come to view their wasted moments and abused privileges, their regrets will be sad, but unavailing. We cannot be too earnest in pleading with the young to seize and improve their present advantages, in urging them not to spend their energies in chasing after butterflies, that will always elude their grasp, while there are achievements in knowledge which they may now attain, the possession of which will add a lustre to each succeeding step of age, and crown the meridian and close of life with a harvest of golden fruits.

The labor to be performed, and the difficulties to be overcome, in choosing the path of knowledge, prove great hindrances to the young. Motives for overcoming these hindrances must be urged upon them by others.

Parents should furnish their children motives for the cultivation of their capacities for improvement and happiness. These motives should be drawn from their own example, to be observed in their daily reading and literary conversation, and in the high estimate which they practically place on the means of instruction. They should cheer, encourage and animate their children in the pursuit after knowledge, deeply impressing the idea upon their minds that "it is better to get wisdom than to get gold." While they pay due attention to the body, let them give the mind of their child the dignified position to which it is entitled, and see that he acquires, in the proper season, the accomplishments necessary to adorn true humanity. Let him make his child as strictly accountable for the performance of his tasks at school, as he does for his tasks at home.

But parents should care not only for their own children: they should aid in the education of all the children in the community; and all other members of society should co-operate with them, and show by the liberal provision they make for public instruction, how much they value the education of the young. Nothing can be more creditable to a community, or more highly adorn it, than orderly, virtuous, and accomplished children and youth. But those who have no children to educate, are very apt to feel no interest in the subject, though they are actually just as much benefited thereby as any part of community, if intelligence, unity of feeling, and honesty and confidence in the rising generation, are essential blessings to society. But these blessings cannot be had in any considerable degree without good schools; and no man ought to have and enjoy them, without having first done something to entitle him to them. The fact is, that parents who bring up large families, ought to be exempt from taxation for their education, if any class could be, because society would soon become extinct without them; and persons without families, who do nothing to enlighten and improve community, deserve no society and no public protection.

Liberal provision should therefore be made for the education of the young, because they cannot provide the means themselves, nor obtain an education without instruction; and because these provisions show the appreciation and interest which the community have in the acquisition of learning, and operate as motives for the acquirement of knowledge. Unless our schools are of sufficient length to give permanent employment to teachers, and unless the pay is sufficient to command the best talents, our schools will remain what they have been—unsatisfactory, and dependent for their success on luck and chance.

To secure a continued and permanent interest in our schools, individual effort seems, at present, to be more needed than any other agency. We have school-houses and the attendant accommodations; we have Teachers and Prudential Committees; we have Town and State Committees; we have Teachers' Associations and Teachers'

Institutes ; we have School Publications and Legislative Enactments ;— agencies sufficient, one would think, to accomplish every reasonable desire. These agencies attract considerable attention, but still the whole work is not done. These agencies doubtless do much. But individuals should not throw all responsibility upon them. Great numbers of children are still left uneducated, or but partially under the influences of our schools. Many a child can be found in our villages, who is not a regular attendant on any school, who does not appreciate the privileges of a school, who has no father, or mother, or friend, to encourage him to go to school. He needs a book, or a few clothes, and a kind and sympathizing friend to take him by the hand and lead him to the school-room. He needs encouragement and a smiling face, not for a day merely, but for weeks and months. This is individual work, and can only be done by one who knows the condition and character of the poor, the outcast and forsaken, who are to be found in greater or less numbers in all our villages. Such as these our present agencies can force within the limits of our schools, but they cannot retain them there, because they cannot hold them by the cords of sympathy and love which individuals alone can throw around them. For want of such influences, our schools are now suffering very much in lack of interest, in irregularity and in-attendance.

When every agency has been faithfully and conscientiously employed, and the children have been placed within the limits of the school-room, yet the entire work of education will fail, unless the children are left in the hands of accomplished teachers. Hence the necessity of confiding the selection and hiring of teachers to the keeping of competent and responsible authorities. Children will not love their school, will not be constant in their attendance, will make no commendable progress, unless they are well instructed, well governed and pleasantly employed while in school. To do this is the work of the accomplished teacher.—No other can do it. “He that has found a way,” says Locke, “to keep a child’s spirit easy, active, and free, and yet at the same time to restrain him in every thing he has a mind to, and to draw him into things that are uneasy to him ; he, I say, who knows how to reconcile these seeming contradictions, has in my opinion, got the true secret of education.”

Thus, we have urged the claims of our schools upon the sympathy and support of our fellow citizens, on the ground of the necessity of education, because no one can ever act independently without knowledge, and no one can ever learn sufficiently from his own observation and experience ; from the advantages of education, shown by their contributing to the enjoyment and happiness of the young, and in promoting health of mind as well as health of body ; we have stated some of the reasons why so many youth fail to improve their school days, the advantages of education appearing so remote to them, and their natural reluctance to grapple with the difficulties to be overcome in acquiring knowledge ; by indicating means for overcoming this reluctance—on the part of the pupil, by fixedness and definiteness of purpose in his education, by drawing a picture of neglected cultivation as best seen in the barrenness of advanced life, with its attendant sorrows and unavailing regrets ; on the part of others, by the example and influence of parents and guardians ; by a liberal provision for public instruction ; by individual influences and exertions, and by a proper training while in school.
